Things That Count Most in Making the City Beautiful Statues With a Story

If Every One Lends a Hand. And while every one with a grain of public spirit in his heart is glad and proud indeed to point to every material advantage that Washington can boffst, the pride and pleasure will sink a little deeper and grow a little broad-er when he can walk up and down the city streets and point to the homes where neighbors have vied with neighbors, friends with friends, to contribute their mite of civic charm. And when he can follow the side streets, the back streets, the up and the down streets, and all the obscure byways and still and the new spirit at work, then he can boast as much as he likes that Washington is a real "city beautiful." For there are not many waste places that cannot be made to "blossom as the if every one will lend a hand.

Judge from my picture as to the truth of what I say to you—that the crowning feminine attribute is a bust of beautiful proportions, framess, and exquisite development. Then ask yourself how much you would like to have such a photograph of yourself, showing the glory of womanhood, with its lines of infinite charm and grace. It would be worth far more than a two-cent stamp, would it not? Then let me give you my message—let me tell you of what I have learned, and let me give you recent pictures of myself to prove what I say—for if you will write me today

I Will Tell You How—FREE

I will tell you gladly and willingly, why should any woman neglect an opportunity to escape the pain and heartache of being skinny, scrawny, angular, and unattractive in body? Misery is not our heritage. Nature planned that you—a woman—should have the rich, pulsing lines of warm, living flesh molded after the mother of us all, the description of whom perfumes our sacred literature with love and admiration for the divinity of woman's form. For why should there be that pitiful aspect—the face of a woman and the form of a man?

the big work of improvement through the transforming hand of care in their homes. For a plain, drab little house grown dull from neglect and a real disgrace to the whole neighborhood may be made to fairly sing a song of gladness by a woman who possesses the true "clean-up" and the garden spirits.

We look to women to start the winful park systems and tree-lined streets, not even of the all-pervading cleantiness. All these make for attractive civic growth, but the thing that counts the most is a long, unbroken chain of interest and pride in the individual homes. For it is there that the vital touches are given that lead to the real "city beaulful."

First of all, each home must fling out its flag of loyalty to the wave of improvement by removing every rub-bishy sign from its own little plot of look.

We look to women to start the wincow-boxes with their riotous bloom; and, you know, whether it is a single faithfully tended, feathery plant on a a-bloom with floral magnificence, the city is the richer and the more beautiful for its presence there. We expect women to hang the baskets, to trail the vines and to coax them all to grow—and these are some of the little touches that make a street alive and invite stranger-folk to linger for another light of the wines and to coax them all to grow—and the wines are street alive and invite stranger-folk to linger for another look-boxes with their riotous bloom; and, you know, whether it is a single faithfully tended, feathery plant on a a-bloom with floral magnificence, the city is the richer and the more beautiful for its presence there. But it is not civic pride alone that prompts the call for improvement, for there is the selfish side to consider. Ugliness, bareness, and uncleanliness are dwarfing and stiffing to individual life, while one's whole nature expand in a clear and beautiful environment.

So, whatever any one else may do or may leave undone, let's fly our own little "clean-up" flag.

We want to see streets protectingly lined with trees that reach out a hearty, royal welcome to friends and strangers alike, and we are happy for every new playground that extends its ever-open invitation to boys and girls to play at will within its gates and to grow strong and gay and happy. No statue in the world has profoundly moved so many people as the "Laccoon." Millions gazed upon it during the centuries when the "Venus of Milo" was lying when the "Venus of Milo" was lying buried and unknown on the island whence the perfect marble woman takes her name. These sculptures, with the "Apollo Belvedere," are the most prized statues in the world. But the difficulties of reproduction make the "Laocoon" less familiar

While the "Venus of Milo" and the Apollo are works of sheer beauty, the "Laocoon" has the majesty of terror. You nay see a very wonderful picture of the sculpture in "The Mentor" for this week, and read also the brilliant and authoritative comment by Prof. J. C. Van Dyke, Laccoon played a part in about the best known incident in the Homeric epic, the drawing into Troy of the wooden horse. Laccoon was a priest of Apollo and an important man in Troy, but he didn't have influence enough to prevent his fellow citizens from bringing in that wooden horse, which was filled with soldiers, as you remember, and resulted in the downou remember, and resulted in the down fall of Troy, after a siege of ten years.

The legends all seem to agree that Laccoon turned from Apollo to Neptune, even
